Acknowledgements

I owe everything I have accomplished so far to numerous people whom I have met at Kanda University of International Studies (KUIS) and in my professional and personal life.

First and foremost, I would like to express my gratitude to my thesis supervisor, Nobuko Hasegawa. I have been deeply indebted to her since I began studying linguistics in my Master's program at KUIS. Her deep insight has opened my eyes to the field and showed me what is essential in linguistic research. She has continued to provide me with elegant linguistic concepts and remarkable foresight, without which I would never have finished writing this thesis. She has presented me not only with academic support, but has also shown me how one should live as a researcher, all of which is extremely valuable and has profoundly influenced my life.

I would like to convey my deep gratitude to the members of my thesis advising committee, Enoch Iwamoto and Yoshio Endo from KUIS, and Shigeru Miyagawa from MIT, for their valuable advice. Their detailed comments and constructive suggestions have been especially beneficial during the rewriting of this thesis. It was also an honor to attend Shigeru Miyagawa's exciting lectures and to receive his valuable comments during his time at KUIS.

I am grateful to Kazuko Inoue, who has also instructed me since I was in my Master's program. It has been a privilege to study under her guidance; she has generously presented her vast knowledge and incredible insight, which has always helped enlighten me to substantive issues. Without her extensive advice, I would never have completed my graduate studies at KUIS.

I appreciate Takeo Saito, for he has presented me with fruitful courses of syntax as well as the best environment for studying linguistics at the graduate school. He has also continued to give me helpful suggestions and encouragement.

I would like to express my appreciation to Yukio Kigawa for introducing me to Japanese dialectical phenomena, which has broadened my linguistic perspective. I wish to thank Yukie Horiba for her exciting courses on second language acquisition, which also widened my perspectives. I thank Miyoko Kobayashi for her helpful advice and encouragement. I am grateful to Yasuo Ishii and Kazuki Kuwabara for their illuminating lectures and discussions. I wish to thank Robert De Silva, who instructed me in academic writing in my Master's program from the very beginning, and helped me improve my writing skills. I am also grateful to Jenn Holland, who has helped me tremendously in rewriting this thesis with patience. I would also like to thank my professors at KUIS, Shoko Haraoka, Yuichi Watanabe, and Katsushi Hikasa, for their academic support.

Before I entered the graduate school at KUIS, I was fortunate to have had several opportunities to take courses at other academic institutions, where I prepared to start my linguistic career. I would like to express my gratitude to my professors during this period: Takeru Homma, Masaru Kajita, Hisatsugu Kitahara, Yukio Otsu, and Akira Watanabe. I am especially indebted to Akira Watanabe, who has continued to assist me with his vast intellectual knowledge, and by generously giving his time in appointments.

After being certified as a PhD candidate at KUIS, I studied for one year as a research student at Yokohama National University (YNU), under the supervision of Roger Martin. I am immensely thankful to him for his guidance as I developed my research skills that year, and that he continues to offer his support.

I have also benefited from the valuable advice and suggestions of a number of people outside of KUIS, including Hideki Kishimoto, Masaki Sano, Yuji Takano, Satoshi Tomioka, and Asako Uchibori. Parts of this paper were presented at the 6th Linguistics Colloquium at KUIS in January 2004, the 10th Morphology and Lexicon Forum (MLF) at Tokyo University in March 2004, the Linguistic Colloquium at Ritsumeikan University in April 2005, and the 23rd Meeting of the English Linguistic Society of Japan at Kyushu University in November 2005. I would like to thank the audiences of these presentations for their helpful comments, in particular Hiroto Hoshi, Taro Kageyama, Mikinari Matsuoka, Tomohiro Miyake, Kunio Nishiyama, Naoyuki Ono, Yoko Sugioka, Takumi Tagawa, Koichi Takezawa, and Saeko Urushibara.

Many thanks go to my wonderful seniors and colleagues at KUIS: Megumi Ebinuma, Kazuma Fujimaki, Yukio Furukawa, Masatoshi Honda, Nevenka Nikorich Hosonaka, Taketo Ito, Noboru Kamiya, Hironobu Kasai, Masako Manabe, Kazuto Murayama, Takako Nakamura, Shoichi Takahashi, Yoko Takahashi, Sumiko Tonosaki, Yukiko Ueda, Yumiko Uehara, Keiko Watanuki, Masashi Yamada, and Tomoharu Yano. Special thanks go to Yukiko Ueda for her invaluable advice and friendship over the years. She is a "small giant," who always walks in front of me and steers me in the right direction.

I wish to thank the staff at KUIS, especially Chikako Shiina and Keiji Yamamoto, for all of their assistance. Their meticulous efforts are greatly appreciated.

I express my gratitude to the following people for their help and friendship: Yoko Domae, Mika Endo, Ikuko Hasebe, Miwa Isobe, Maya Kobayashi, Motoko Koshiyama, Keiko Miyagawa, Takashi Munakata, Saki Nakayama, Miki Obata, Tetsuya Sano, Miyuki Sawada, Hiroyuki Shimada, Eri Takahashi, and Hideaki Yamashita.

I would like to offer personal thanks to Kiyoko Osawa, one of my best friends. Her encouragement always kept me in high spirits.

Finally, I express deep gratitude to my parents: my mother, Ryuko Okura, for her affection and generosity, and my late father, Michiyoshi Okura, for his good memory always being there.
